"Hans Theessink is an international blues treasure. He is one of the world's pre-eminent country pickers and his warm baritone expresses blues."

~ Blues Revue (World's leading 'bluespaper')

Hans Theessink

We've already had an American in Paris, but a Dutchman in Vienna? And one who has dedicated himself, body and soul, to American blues and roots music? Okay, Hans Theessink (pronounced Tay-sink) did not pick the easiest way to do this, but he has done so with a certain degree of single-mindedness.

Like others of his generation, in the early 1960's a love of the Blues took hold of the man whom Bo Diddley described as "one helluva guitar player" and it has not let go since. Above all, the country blues — with its earthy and heartfelt sound — impressed Hans Theessink and played a major role in his development as a musician. His own roots are unmistakably in the blues, but he has also been influenced by countless other aspects of American roots music. As a songwriter he has succeeded in building bridges to the present — addressing issues which reflect the reality of the here and now.

Theessink's first recording was an EP in 1970. He has released 20 albums, a songbook, a blues-guitar instruction video, and a DVD. His CDs are guaranteed award winners. "Banjoman", the tribute project to Derroll Adams that Hans produced with Arlo Guthrie, was nominated for a Grammy.

One of the top blues and roots musicians worldwide, Hans Theessink has entertained audiences around the globe during a musical career that spans over more than 35 years. He has become one of the most sought-after artists of the international blues scene. More or less constantly "on tour", he plays an average of 200 concerts a year — a modern day troubadour and entertainer who keeps on spellbinding audiences all over the world with his rich and emotional sounds.
